

7. A glossary of Austronesian reconstructions

Reconstructions: R. David Zorc

Editing, introduction and finder list: Malcolm D. Ross

Introduction

This glossary contains some 1650 reconstructions for high-order Austronesian proto languages, supplied from his data base by R. David Zorc, and an English finder list to the reconstructions. These reconstructions are provided here for readers' reference and to give an indication of how far the task of reconstruction had progressed at the time of publication. The task of reconstruction, at least for a large language family, is never complete, as new data are always leading to refinements. Hence the reconstructions here represent Zorc's current understanding, contained in a data base which is continually updated, and entail certain conventions which encapsulate unanswered questions. These are discussed below.

Zorc (pers. comm.) points out that, although the shapes of the reconstructions are generally his own, they owe much to the scholarly research of Robert A. Blust and others.

Each reconstruction is labelled either PAN, PMP, PHF or PHN. PAN and PMP are Proto Austronesian and Proto Malayo-Polynesian respectively, as discussed in Chapters 2 and 3 and shown in Figure 1. PHF and PHN stand for 'Proto Hesperonesian-Formosan' and 'Proto Hesperonesian', cover terms used by Zorc to indicate that the proto etymon is reflected in a narrower range of languages than PAN and PMP. Items labelled PHF are reflected in Formosan and Western Malayo-Polynesian languages, those labelled PHN only in Western Malayo-Polynesian languages. In the terms of Figure 1, items labelled PHF and PHN are reconstructible for Proto Austronesian and Proto Malayo-Polynesian respectively, but had been lost in Proto Central/Eastern Malayo-Polynesian. However, the labels capture this narrower distribution of reflexes and respect the hypotheses of those Austronesian scholars who do not accept Blust's subgrouping hypothesis and who hold that (a) the Western Malayo-Polynesian languages constitute a genetic subgroup, and (b) that this grouping and the Formosan languages form an exclusive higher-order subgroup.

A question mark against a label generally indicates that reflexes of the item are not sufficiently well distributed in daughter languages for the level (PAN, PMP etc) to be assigned with certainty.

This glossary contains a selection of reconstructions for the highest-order proto languages of the Austronesian language family. Other reconstructions for PAN and PMP, as well as reconstructions for Proto Central/Eastern Malayo-Polynesian, Proto Eastern Malayo-Polynesian and Proto Oceanic are to be found in Blust's publications, especially Blust (1980a, 1984a, 1986a). Wurm and Wilson (1975) is a compendium of reconstructions by a large number of scholars for proto languages at all levels within the Austronesian family. Since 1975 a number of collections of reconstructions have appeared for proto languages of lower orders than PAN and PMP, many of which are referred to in Chapter 3.

The reconstructions in the glossary are presented in a single orthography, a modified version of the system devised by Dyen (Table 2, p. 54). Zorc retains all Dyen's symbols except T, D, X, x, and the subscripts to s. Retention of c, z, and ñ reflects the fact that some scholars reconstruct these phonemes in PAN and PMP (see discussion in Chapter 3). Additionally Zorc uses subscripts to d: his unsubscripted d is roughly comparable with Dahl's d<sub>1</sub>, his d<sub>2</sub> is close to Dyen's D (or less often Dahl's d<sub>2</sub>), and his d<sub>3</sub> is approximately as reconstructed by Dahl. For the distinction between h and H the reader is referred to Zorc (1982).

Where the data permit their reconstruction, word accent (') and short vowels (˘) are indicated in accordance with the conventions discussed in Zorc (1978, 1983).

Parentheses indicate that the phoneme they contain is reflected in some but not all daughter-languages, whilst square brackets indicate that the phoneme they contain cannot be reconstructed with certainty. Empty square brackets indicate that a laryngeal phoneme (Zorc 1982) may be reconstructible, but its identity is uncertain.

A plus sign (+) without spaces on either side indicates that the following syllable is a monosyllabic root as defined by Zorc (1990) and discussed in Chapter 3. A hyphen (-) indicates a morpheme break. Two slashes are used to indicate the infix in **b/in/áHi*.

For the sake of alphabetisation, prefixes are shown after the item and are indicated either by a plus sign with a space on each side (e.g. **babáq + ma-* = **ma-babáq*) or, where the prefix does not occur in all daughter-languages, by a slash (e.g. **dajam / ma-* = **dajam* and **ma-dajam*). Where a slash and hyphen occur without a prefix, this indicates that the item is always reflected with a prefix in daughter-languages, but that this prefix varies from language to language. Hence **buken* /- may be read as \-buken*.

The reconstructions are listed in normal alphabetical order, with the additions that the nasals are listed in the order m, n, N, ñ, ŋ and that where lower- and upper-case symbols represent a phonemic distinction, the lower-case symbol precedes the upper-case (e.g. c precedes C). The glottal stop (ʔ) and symbols in parentheses are ignored in alphabetisation.

The glosses also entail several conventions. Square brackets are used for two purposes: (i) where grammatical information is given; (ii) where reference is made to a related reconstruction. Grammatical information in the case of kin terms indicates whether the reconstructed form is used to address a relative or to refer to her or him. Abbreviations used in referring to related reconstructions are alt, pointing to an alternate reconstruction; dbl, pointing to a doublet (where two similar forms are both independently reconstructible); dsj, pointing to a disjunctive alternative (where the two forms are reconstructible only by allowing the overlap of cognate sets); red, pointing to the source of a reduced form; and cf inviting comparison with another reconstruction.
